INTRODUCTION TO SECOND EDITION

In the earlier edition of this gazetteer (Paynter, 1985, Ornithological Gazetteer of Argentina) I remarked on the vigor of 200 years of Argentinian ornithological investigations, as exemplified by a bibliography of twelve hundred titles and a list of some three thousand ornithologically significant localities. The decade since the first edition has witnessed an explosive growth in the already robust study of birds in Argentina. The bibliography has increased by about 970 titles and the number of localities by roughly 2,500 sites. In other words, the bibliography and ornithological sites have nearly doubled in a span of but ten years.

The proliferation of publications has made it increasingly difficult to examine all the works known to exist, in spite of the efforts of many librarians and colleagues to locate this material for me. There are, therefore, proportionally more publications cited as "not seen" than in the bibliography of the earlier volume. Undoubtedly there are also obscure publications of which I am unaware.

The past decade has seen a remarkable change in the way data have been collected for this gazetteer. Earlier I was dependent on published information and details extracted from specimens in my own institution and those in the Field Museum of Natural History. Now many American institutions, including all but one of the larger museums, have computer databases allowing ready accessibility to information needed for this gazetteer. This permits a comprehensiveness unobtainable only ten year ago.

INTRODUCTION TO FIRST EDITION

The systematic study of Argentinian birds was begun two hundred years ago by Felix Azara. The antiquity of Argentinian ornithology, as well as its vigor relative to that of other Latin American countries, is apparent in the size of this gazetteer, with its approximately three thousand localities of ornithological significance, and also is shown by the length of the accompanying bibliography, which has some twelve hundred titles.

The scope of this volume does not differ appreciably from its predecessors. All localities from which birds have been collected, or at which they have been observed, are included. For each site the collectors, or observers, and their dates are recorded. These data have been extracted from published sources, but also incorporated is information from all Argentinian specimens in the Museum of Comparative Zoology and the Field Museum of Natural History, the latter by courtesy of M. A. Traylor, Jr. and Lorain Stephens. Information from a few unreported specimens in other institutions is included as well, but a systematic search of these collections was not feasible.

The gazetteer covers continental Argentina and its nearby islands, but not Argentinian Antarctica and oceanic islands. The Map of Hispanic America (the "Millionth Map") is the primary reference in describing localities. As this series is somewhat outdated, and may not be available to all users of the gazetteer, care has been taken to indicate relative positions of sites by referring to major geographical landmarks that can be found in the Atlas de la República Argentina (1979) or in similar less detailed, but more accessible, maps. The Automóvil Club Argentino's road maps are convenient for finding modern, and often small, localities, but these depict no contours and rarely indicate geographical coordinates. They are referred to here mainly when a site is shown on no other available map.

The bibliography attempts to list all that has been written on the birds of Argentina. Papers dealing with Argentinian birds that are without any geographical orientation, as, for example, anatomical descriptions or accounts of species in captivity, are omitted, as are paleontological studies and articles with no scientific content. Publications with but incidental references to the occurrences of species in Argentina are also excluded from the bibliography, although they are cited within the text if they provide information not available elsewhere.

As in earlier volumes in this series, the United States Board on Geographic Names has been the authority for spelling and geographical coordinates.

There are few idiosyncracies in this gazetteer that are not self-explanatory. However, one should be aware that the early ornithologist M. Lillo frequently failed to distinguish between specimens he collected and those he obtained from others. At times, therefore, collections made by others may be attributed erroneously to Lillo. Also, the telegraphic style employed in the species list in Dabbene's major study (1910) has sometimes made it difficult to associate collectors with localities. Furthermore, it seems that Dabbene, as Lillo, did not always distinguish the assembler of a collection from the actual collector and, moreover, he seems on occasion to have confused the authors of papers with the collectors. Fortunately, except in restricted situations, these sources of error will not lessen the usefulness of the gazetteer.

For answering innumerable questions and for help in assembling literature and maps, assistance which often exceeded the courtesies one can reasonably expect from colleagues, I am grateful to E. H. Bucher, R. Campbell, M. I. Christie, G. W. Cottrell, M. R. de la Peña, B. Harrington, P. S. Humphrey, R. I. Johnson, T. Narosky, J. R. Navas, A. F. Newton, Jr., M. Nores, C. C. Olrog, S. L. Olson, H. W. Pratt, L. Stephens, and M. A. Traylor, Jr.

Once again I am very grateful to Alison Pirie, who found many obscure references hidden in the library stacks, who prepared the camera-ready text for this publication, correcting and editing my work in the process, and who, with F. R. Davis, prepared the maps. Although no user of this gazetteer will identify her contributions, they are many.

A headwater of Río Deseado [4745/6554 (USBGN)] rising in northwestern Santa Cruz, N of Lago Ghio [4718/7130 (USBGN)] (MHA; ACA, Santa Cruz); Colburn, 9 Apr. 1896 [1898] (Scott & Sharpe, 1910:291), 9, 14, 17, 21, 24, 26-27 Apr., 12, 14, 18, 20, 24, 27, 30 May, Hatcher, 14-15 Apr., 13, 20 May 1898 (Scott, 1900a:55; Scott & Sharpe, 1904; 1910; 1912; Stone, 1928; all as "Arroyo Eke," sometimes as "Arroyo Gio" [Río Ghio]; FMNH, as "Arroyo Eke"); Scott & Sharpe (1915:575, 668) say that Arroyo Eke is shown on Hatcher's map accompanying the Princeton expeditions' reports (Hatcher, 1903, Reports of the Princeton University Expeditions to Patagonia, 1896-1899, Vol. I, Narrative of the expeditions' geography) as Arroyo Gio [Río Ghio, 4711/7145 (USBGN)] and is a headwater of Río Deseado; the map indicates the stream rises at the eastern end of Lago Gio [Lago Ghio] and also it fails to show Río Ecker; the area is poorly mapped on MHA, but the recent ACA, Santa Cruz map shows that Río Ghio rises to W of Lago Ghio and flows into it and is, therefore, not a headwater of Río Deseado, and it also shows Río Ecker rising to N of Lago Ghio and flowing into Río Deseado; Scott & Sharpe's remark (1915:640) that Arroyo Eke is near Cape Fairweather [Cabo Buen Tiempo, 5133/6857 (USBGN)] is an obvious error; it seems reasonable to assume that "Eke" is "Ecker" and that the Princeton party was on the Río Ecker, not the Río Ghio.

Elena, Soler, F. C. al P., Buenos Ayres)" (Ibis, 1892:580); "Sta. Elena, Soler, F. C. al Pacifico, Buenos Ayres" (Ibis, 1893:ix); and "Estancia Sta. Elena, Halsey, F. C. O., Buenos Ayres" (Ibis, 1897:287); Camperi (1993, Hornero, 13:271) indicates the estancia was in Partido Ameghino [not located], obviously an error for Partido General Pinto, 3445/6215 (USBGN), in which is located the town of Ameghino [3450/6227 (USBGN)], in northwestern Buenos Aires; this is on an important railway and must be the approximate location of the estancia.
